1

Talk to five real people

Book short calls with people who have the problem. Ask what they do today and what it costs them. Do not pitch your idea.

2

Look for people already paying

If customers pay for a clunky workaround, the problem is real. Check forums, reviews and competitor pages for complaints.

3

Put up a simple landing page

Describe the offer in plain words and add a sign-up button. The number of people who click tells you more than compliments do.

4

Sell it before it exists

Offer a manual version to a few people. A promise to pay is stronger evidence than a promise to try it.

5

Write down the verdict

Decide your pass mark before the week starts. At the end, continue, change the idea or drop it.

Pass it on

Share it with a founder who is still polishing an untested idea.
