1

Grants fund a defined project

A grant pays for specific activities under a program's rules. It usually has an application, criteria and reporting.

2

The R&D Tax Incentive rewards past work

It is claimed on eligible R&D you have already done and spent money on. It does not fund work in advance.

3

Investment buys a share

An investor gives you money for part of the company and expects the business to grow substantially.

4

Match the type to your stage

Early projects may suit grants. Companies already doing experimental work may qualify for R&D tax. Fast growth plans suit investors.

5

They can work together

Many companies use more than one. Check how each affects the others, as some programs limit stacking.
